

Suzan K. Heglin

Suzan graduated from the University of California, San Diego in Communications and also Psychology. She took graduate classes in sensation and perception and won SCURI grants for original research with EEGs. She was the principal researcher in the cognitive psychology lab of Norman Anderson. She also wrote a Master's Thesis on Hwabyung, working with Naropa University.

Most of her professional life she has been a writer. She has won SPJA awards and has nearly a hundred articles to her credit that have appeared in newspapers, magazines and reports. She has also worked in Public Relations and Marketing.

She has worked in and around school districts in three states. She taught art history at the elementary level, taught business at the college level, wrote a science-based curriculum for an international program and was a TAG Advisor with the Boulder Valley School District.